Ravi Aron was named to the faculty of the Carey Business School in 2008. He is an associate professor in the tenure track with expertise in information technology strategy, health care strategy, and health care information systems.

PhD in Information Systems, Stern School of Business, New York University

Mark J. Bittle has an extensive background in health care administration. He has served in a number of senior leadership positions in ambulatory services development, physician practice management and integration, and hospital operations management primarily in an academic medicine environment. He is currently a director with LifeBridge Health responsible for service-line development and integration. Bittle joined the Carey Business School in 2004.

DrPH, Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health

Dipankar Chakravarti was appointed to the Carey Business School in 2009 as a tenured professor with expertise in the areas of marketing and consumer behavior, specializing in consumer psychology in developing economies. He is faculty director of the Carey Business School’s Innovation for Humanity course.

PhD in Economics, Stanford University

Chester Chambers joined the faculty of the Carey Business School in 2009 as an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in operations management strategy, dynamic programming, and modeling. In addition, he has an associate faculty appointment at the Armstrong Institute for Patient Safety and Quality at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine.

PhD in Operations Management, Fuqua School of Business, Duke University

Maqbool Dada was appointed to the Carey Business School in 2009 as a tenured professor with expertise in operations management, supply chain management, and pricing models.

PhD in Management, Sloan School of Management, Massachusetts Institute of Technology

Tinglong Dai is an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in the areas of health care operations management, operations-marketing interfaces, and supply chain management. He joined the Carey Business School in 2013.

PhD, Operations Management, Carnegie Mellon University

Sanjay Desai joined the Carey Business School as assistant professor (courtesy) in 2014. Dr. Desai is the director of the Osler Medical Training Program and a specialist in pulmonary and critical care medicine at Johns Hopkins University. He is an active clinician and investigator, serving as attending physician in the hospital’s medical intensive care unit.

MD, Harvard Medical School

Ray Dorsey specializes in research focusing on new treatments for movement disorders and the development of better ways to deliver care, including telemedicine, for individuals with neurological conditions.

MD, University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine

James Fackler joined the Carey Business School as an associate professor (courtesy) in 2014. He is an associate professor in the department of anesthesiology and critical care medicine—pediatrics at Johns Hopkins School of Medicine. His research interest includes optimizing patient surgical services by analyzing mathematical models of patient flow through hospitals, on either a scheduled or emergency basis.

MD, Rush Medical College (Chicago, IL)

Maryann Fralic was cross appointed to the Carey Business School in 2008 from the Johns Hopkins School of Nursing where she holds a primary appointment as professor in the Department of Health Systems and Outcomes. She is a professor with expertise in the area of health services administration and executive nurse practice.

DrPH in Health Services Administration, Graduate School of Public Health, University of Pittsburgh

Kevin Frick has spent more than 16 years at the Johns Hopkins University Bloomberg School of Public Health before becoming vice dean for education at the Carey Business School in April 2013. His research focuses on cost-effectiveness analysis in fields ranging from ophthalmology to nursing to cancer care.

PhD in Economics and Health Services Organization and Policy, University of Michigan
Roman Galperin joined the Carey Business School in 2013 as an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in organization of professional work, labor markets for experts, and the effects of worker identity on organizational performance.

PhD in Management and Economic Sociology, Massachusetts Institute of Technology

Toby Gordon joined the Carey Business School in 2010 as an associate professor in the practice track with expertise in health care policy, management of health systems, and technology commercialization and serves as the faculty director of the health care and life sciences MBA programs. She has a joint appointment with the Health Policy and Management Department of the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health and a part-time appointment with the Department of Surgery of the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine.

ScD in Health Policy and Management, Operations Research, Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health

Michelle Grunauer joined the Carey Business School as a professor (courtesy) in 2013. Dr. Grunauer is a professor and dean of the School of Medicine at the University San Francisco de Quito (USFQ), Ecuador. Her expertise includes the area of child mental health and critical care.

MD, School of Medicine, Universidad Central del Ecuador
PhD, Facultade de Medicina de la Universidad de Sao Paulo, Brazil

Brian Gunia is an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in the areas of negotiation, ethical decision making, and organizational failure. He was appointed to the Carey Business School in 2011.

PhD in Management and Organizations, Kellogg School of Management, Northwestern University

Erik Helzer is an assistant professor in the research track. He joined the Carey Business School in 2014. His research focuses on moral character, ethical behavior, and self- and social-assessment.

PhD, Cornell University

Manuel Hermosilla joined the Carey Business School as an assistant professor in the research track in 2014. His current research focuses on the innovation of new technologies, with an emphasis on the biomedical industry.

PhD, Northwestern University

Changmi Jung joined the Carey Business School in 2014. Her main area of research is clinical health informatics, with a focus on the innovative e-Health delivery models via patient portals and online consultations.

PhD in Healthcare Information Systems, Carnegie Mellon University

Sharon Kim joined the Carey Business School in 2011 as an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in the areas of individual and group creativity in organizations. She also holds an appointment as an associate faculty member at the Armstrong Institute for Patient Safety and Quality at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine.

PhD in Organizational Behavior, School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell University

Ralph Kray joined the Carey Business School in 2011. He is an executive scholar-in-residence in health care management with expertise in the areas of global health business research and development, hospital management, alliance management with private industry, Med. 2.0, and social philosophy of the health society.

PhD from University of Siegen and Charité - Universitätsmedizin Berlin, Germany

Stacey Lee was appointed to the faculty of the Carey Business School in 2008. She is an assistant professor in the practice track with expertise in business law. Previously, she was a practicing attorney for 10 years, working as both a trial lawyer and corporate in-house counsel.

JD, University of Maryland School of Law

Soo Lee is currently an associate professor at Old Dominion University in Norfolk, Virginia, where she teaches human resource management. Before taking this position, she taught at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Her research in human resource management intersects business strategy, knowledge management, entrepreneurship, and health care management.

PhD in Business Administration (Human Resources Management), University of Washington

Nayoung Lee Louie joined the faculty of the Carey Business School in 2013 as a lecturer with expertise in brain imaging, computational anatomy, technology transfer, and statistical analysis. For the previous three years, she was a project manager associated with the school's Discovery to Market technology transfer course.

PhD in Biomedical Engineering, Johns Hopkins School of Medicine
Mario Macis was named to the Carey Business School in 2010 as an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in the areas of labor and human resources economics, health economics, and experimental economics. Macis is also an associate faculty member at the Armstrong Institute for Patient Safety and Quality at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine, and a research fellow at the Institute for the Study of Labor (IZA).

PhD in Economics, University of Chicago

Kieren Marr joined faculty of the Carey Business School in 2010. She is a Professor of Medicine in the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine and Professor of Oncology in the Sidney Kimmel Comprehensive Cancer Center. She specializes in infectious diseases in immunosuppressed patients and serves as director for the Transplant and Oncology Infectious Diseases program. She serves as a liaison for technology transfer projects for the Carey Business School Discovery to Market course.

PhD in Medicine, University of Chicago

Jill Marsteller joined the Carey Business School as associate professor (courtesy) in 2014. Her research includes a national evaluation of the Chronic Care Model (CCM) and the organizational traits related to successful implementation of the CCM.

PhD, University of California

Elliott McVeigh joined the faculty of Radiology at Johns Hopkins School of Medicine immediately after obtaining his PhD. In 2007, McVeigh was appointed Massey Professor and Director of the Department of Biomedical Engineering. His vision for the department is to produce new knowledge from stellar laboratories and promote the transfer of that knowledge into patient care at the fastest pace possible.

PhD, University of Toronto

Supriya Munshaw was named to the faculty of the Carey Business School in 2013 as a lecturer with expertise in immunology, infectious diseases, the commercialization of early-stage technologies, and strategy and management in the health care and pharmaceutical industries.

PhD in Computational Biology and Bioinformatics, Duke University

Jian Ni was named to the faculty of the Carey Business School in 2010 as an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in the areas of consumer behavior and firm strategy in the health care, technology, and financial services industries. Ni also holds a joint faculty appointment in the Department of Economics of the Johns Hopkins Krieger School of Arts and Sciences.

PhD in Marketing, Tepper School of Business, Carnegie Mellon University

Roger Orsini became an adjunct professor at the Carey Business School after obtaining his MBA from the school. He is currently developing a course teaching corporate governance to MBA students. In addition, he conducts seminars for the corporate world. Dr. Orsini is a leader and expert in the field of cleft lip and palate surgery. He developed and directed the multi-disciplinary Eastern Shore Cleft Lip and Palate Clinic serving the Delmarva Peninsula.

Pankaj Jay Pasricha, a professor of medicine, is director of digestive disorders (Bayview) and director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Neurogastroenterology since 2012. Previously, Pasricha trained in Gastroenterology at Johns Hopkins Hospital where he was associate director of the Marvin Schuster Center for Gastrointestinal Motility.

MD, All-India Institute of Medical Sciences, New Delhi, India

Stephanie Peditto is Director of Strategic Collaborations at Johns Hopkins Medicine’s Armstrong Institute for Patient Safety and Quality. Ms. Peditto is charged with leading national and international collaborations on quality and patient safety. She has worked in clinical quality and patient safety collaborations in the U.S., Latin America, Europe, Asia, and the Middle East.

MHS, Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health

Phillip Phan joined the Carey Business School in 2008. He is executive vice dean and a professor in the research track with expertise in the areas of corporate governance and technological entrepreneurship.

PhD in Strategic Management, University of Washington School of Business Administration

Peter Pronovost is a professor in the departments of anesthesiology/critical care medicine and surgery at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine and a professor at the Carey Business School. He serves in an advisory capacity to the World Health Organization (WHO) and is leading its efforts to improve patient safety measurement, evaluation, and leadership capacity globally.

Bonnie Robeson joined the faculty of the Carey Business School in 1989. She is a senior lecturer with expertise in the area of entrepreneurship in biotechnology.

PhD in Nutritional Biochemistry, West Virginia University
Rahul Sett is a post-doctoral research scholar at the Carey Business School. He is an assistant professor of marketing at the Indian Institute of Management Kozhikode. His research interests include consumer psychology, judgment formation and decision making, pricing, role of personality and cognitive processes in business-to-business negotiations.

PhD, Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad

Emilia Simeonova joined the Carey Business School in 2013 as an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in areas that include the economics of health care delivery, patient adherence to therapy, the interaction between physicians and patients, racial disparities in health outcomes, and children’s health. She previously was an assistant professor in the Economics Department at Tufts University.

PhD in Economics, Columbia University

Colleen Stuart joined the Johns Hopkins Carey Business School in 2013. She is an assistant professor in the research track with expertise in the areas of group performance, collaborative work and social networks.

PhD in Organizational Behavior, University of Toronto

Lawrence Sung is a registered patent attorney and partner with Baker & Hostetler LLP in Washington, D.C. He was law professor and intellectual property law program director at the University of Maryland Francis King Carey School of Law from 2001-2012. He served as a judicial clerk to Senior Circuit Judge Raymond C. Clevenger, III, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

PhD in microbiology, U.S. Department of Defense, Uniformed Services University; JD, American University, Washington College of Law

Kayode Williams joined the Division of Pain Medicine Department of Anesthesiology and Critical Care Medicine at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine in 2005. His business focus is on operations management, specialty practice development, acute in-patient revenue cycle management, and medical management consulting.

MD, College of Medicine University of Lagos, Nigeria, 1984; MBA, Ross School of Business, University of Michigan

Dean Wong joined the Carey Business School in 2011. He is a professor by courtesy appointment with expertise in the areas of cognition and the neurobiology of decision making.

MD, University of Toronto. PhD, Johns Hopkins University

Emilia Simeonova joined the Carey Business School in 2013 as an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in areas that include the economics of health care delivery, patient adherence to therapy, the interaction between physicians and patients, racial disparities in health outcomes, and children’s health. She previously was an assistant professor in the Economics Department at Tufts University.

PhD in Economics, Columbia University

Haiyang Yang was appointed to the Johns Hopkins Carey Business School in 2013 as an assistant professor in the tenure track with expertise in marketing, consumer knowledge, and decision making. Yang’s professional experience includes working as a chief software engineer in Japan.

PhD in Marketing, INSEAD

Youseph Yazdi joined the faculty of the Johns Hopkins Department of Biomedical Engineering in 2009 and the Carey Business School in 2011. He is the executive director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Bioengineering Innovation & Design. He is also director of the Coulter Translational Research Partnership, established in 2011, which supports translational medical innovations emerging from collaborations between BME faculty and School of Medicine clinicians.

PhD in Biomedical Engineering, University of Texas at Austin, MBA, University of Pennsylvania, Wharton School of Business

Kathleen M. Sutcliffe is the Bloomberg Distinguished Professor of Business and Medicine at Johns Hopkins University. Her research focuses on how organizations and their members cope with uncertainty and unexpected surprises, and how organizations can be designed to be more reliable and resilient. She is currently investigating these issues in health care as well as in wild-land firefighting, oil and gas exploration, and other dynamic high-risk industries.

PhD, University of Texas at Austin

Lindsay Thompson joined the Carey Business School in 2002. She is an associate professor in the practice track with expertise in the role of character and human values in business, society, and corporate culture.

PhD in Classics, Johns Hopkins University

Dean Wong joined the Carey Business School in 2011. He is a professor by courtesy appointment with expertise in the areas of cognition and the neurobiology of decision making.

MD, University of Toronto. PhD, Johns Hopkins University

Zhuohan Zhang is currently a PhD candidate at Renmin University of China School of Business. Prior to joining the PhD program in Management Science and Engineering, he worked as a researcher at the Medical School of Harvard University (Brigham and Women’s Hospital) in Boston, MA. His research interests include entrepreneurship, innovation and strategy, corporate venturing capital, organizational learning and healthcare management.

PhD in Marketing, Tepper School of Business, Carnegie Mellon University