CAREY BUSINESS SCHOOL MISSION STATEMENT & VALUES

OUR MISSION

The Johns Hopkins Carey Business School supports business knowledge development and education through our own initiatives, innovations, and collaborative programs across the Johns Hopkins University. We create and share knowledge that shapes business practices while educating business leaders who will grow economies and societies, and are exemplary citizens.

OUR MANDATE

Build a business school for Johns Hopkins that is recognized around the world for its faculty research and its development of business leaders.

OUR VALUES

The values of the Carey Business School are guiding principles that help us achieve the mandate and mission of the school. As faculty, staff, and students, we strive to practice these values in our work, our research, and our studies, as we teach business with humanity in mind.

We define our values as the following: collaboration, integrity, respect, community, leadership, and entrepreneurial. Our values form a CIRCLE, with “excellence” at the center. Excellence has been a cornerstone of Johns Hopkins since its founding, and the Carey community must operate at the highest levels in all of our functions.
BUSINESS EDUCATION HISTORY AT JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY

1916 – 1924  College Courses for Teachers

Business courses at Johns Hopkins informally began in 1916 when Henry A. Gantt (Hopkins class of 1880 and originator of the internationally known “Gantt Chart” illustration of production processes) delivered a lecture on industrial efficiency, the first of a number of business oriented talks open to students and the general public alike. Often controversial, Gantt’s lectures focused on the workplace and his disdain of financial manipulation for personal gain, resulting in decreased productivity and manufacturing decline. The year 1916 also marked the start of evening courses in “Business Economics,” although no degree was yet offered. Courses in life insurance and in the technical and engineering fields were subsequently added.

1925 – 1946  College for Teachers

In 1925, Johns Hopkins took over the School of Business Administration at the University of Maryland, absorbing and expanding the program in the newly named College for Teachers. Accounting courses were added to the curriculum, along with additional courses for business employees, ultimately organized into the program “Night Courses for Technical Workers.”

1947 – 1964  McCoy College

The Johns Hopkins trustees established McCoy College to include all evening classes from the various areas of the University. Many Bachelor of Science degrees were awarded during this period thanks to funding from the G.I. Bill. Undergraduate degrees ranged from accounting and business to education, engineering, and numerous liberal arts disciplines. Graduate degrees were also offered in a number of areas.

1965 – 1982  Evening College and Summer Session

The new college was organized into five divisions: Administration and Business; Arts and Sciences; Education; Engineering and Physical Sciences; and Special Programs. Bachelor of Science/Arts degrees in many disciplines were offered. The increasing need to develop a graduate degree in business was also recognized. The Master of Administrative Science (MAS) degree was the result, becoming the area’s most popular business degree during this time. In addition, various Master of Science degrees (such as the MS in Applied Behavioral Science) and a Master of Liberal Arts degree also were offered. Courses were first conducted in Columbia, Maryland.

1983 – 1998
School of Continuing Studies

The Master of Science in Business degree was established in 1990, replacing the MAS degree. Additional Master of Science degrees were added in business disciplines, including information technology, real estate and marketing. The school continued to offer Bachelor of Science/Arts degrees, including expanded undergraduate business options. The Leadership Development Program for Minority Managers was established. Classes were first held in Montgomery County, Maryland, and Washington, DC.

1999 – 2006
School of Professional Studies in Business and Education

The new school’s MBA degree was first offered in 1999. Additional degree programs added during this period included a Master of Science in Finance and a Bachelor of Science in Information Systems. A number of cross-disciplinary master’s and certificate programs were developed in conjunction with other Johns Hopkins schools, including Medicine, Public Health, Nursing, and Arts and Sciences.

2007 – Present
Carey Business School

The Johns Hopkins Carey Business School was established January 1, 2007. In August, 2010 the charter class of the full time Global MBA program was welcomed in the school’s new home in the Legg Mason Tower in the Harbor East neighborhood of Baltimore.

Alumni

Over 24,000 Johns Hopkins University alumni around the world can lay claim to a relationship with the Carey Business School and its predecessor schools. Approximately 6,000 of them received an MBA degree.
CAREY BUSINESS SCHOOL HISTORY

The Johns Hopkins Carey Business School was founded on January 1, 2007 with a gift of $50 million from the late trustee emeritus William Polk Carey. It is the largest gift ever to Johns Hopkins University in support of business education, and enabled the separation of the School of Professional Studies in Business and Education into the School of Education and the Carey Business School.

The Johns Hopkins Carey Business School shares the Johns Hopkins University’s dedication to improving lives on a global scale by addressing pivotal societal issues, including health, poverty, education, and environmental sustainability through rigorous research and education.

For us, this means the transformation of business education, and repurposing the traditional business school toolkit to reflect our principles of humanity, compassion, innovation, and opportunity.

The world needs leaders who understand how business shapes the future and influences our behavior across industries, continents, and cultures.

Nancy Brinker
Founder, Susan G. Komen for the Cure

Shortly after Susan’s death from breast cancer at the age of 36, Brinker founded Susan G. Komen for the Cure® in 1982. Brinker faced an immediate uphill battle: newspapers balked at printing the words "breast cancer," no one talked openly about the disease, there were no 800-numbers, no internet and few, if any, support groups. Few treatment options existed for breast cancer patients and limited resources were committed to the disease. In a matter of years, Brinker broke the silence around breast cancer, and Susan G. Komen is now the world’s largest grassroots network of breast cancer survivors and activists fighting to save lives, empower people, ensure quality care for all and energize science to find the cures. Today, the organization has invested more than $2.2 billion in breast cancer research, education, screening and treatment.

Her creativity in raising awareness led to programs that at the time were revolutionary: In 1983, she founded the Susan G. Komen Race for the Cure® series, which is now the world’s largest and most successful education and fundraising event for breast cancer. She also pioneered cause-related marketing, allowing millions to participate in the fight against breast cancer through businesses that share Komen’s commitment to end the disease forever. Komen’s unwavering advocacy for breast cancer survivors led to new legislation and greater government research funding. Major advances in breast cancer research have been touched by hundreds of millions of dollars in Komen funding.

Brinker’s determination to create a world without breast cancer is matched by her passion for enlisting every segment of society – from leaders to citizens – to participate in the battle. In 2009, President Barack Obama honored her with the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation’s highest civilian honor, for this work. The same year, she was named Goodwill Ambassador for Cancer Control for the United Nations’ World Health Organization, where she continues her mission to put cancer control at the top of the world health agenda.

In 2010, Brinker released her New York Times best-selling memoir “Promise Me,” an inspirational story of her transformation from bereaved sister to the undisputed leader of the ongoing international movement to end breast cancer. She was named one of TIME magazine’s "100 Most Influential People" in 2008. From 2001-2003, she served as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Hungary and served as U.S. Chief of Protocol from 2007-2009 where she was responsible for overseeing all protocol matters for visiting heads of state and presidential travel abroad. In 2008, President George W. Bush appointed her to The Kennedy Center Board of Trustees.
Kevin Buehler
Senior Partner, McKinsey & Company

Kevin is a Senior Partner in the New York office of McKinsey & Company. He is a co-leader and co-founder of Global Risk Practice and also serves as co-leader of the Corporate & Investment Banking Practice in the Americas. Kevin also serves on the Firm Investments Committee, overseeing the management of a range of investment products for firm pension plans and partners of the firm. He has significant experience addressing the strategic, operational, and investment decisions facing leading financial institutions.

Kevin’s thinking on financial institutions and risk management has appeared in the American Banker, the Harvard Business Review, The Wall Street Journal, and the McKinsey Quarterly. His recent experience includes working with 11 U.S. banks with a total of more than $9 trillion in assets to assess the likely impact of proposed Basel III capital and liquidity requirements, developing and implementing a strategy for the wind-down of a large and complex derivatives portfolio, designing and implementing a comprehensive program to achieve best-in-class risk management at a leading financial institution, assisting two leading banks on their stress testing efforts, and serving a central bank on the extension of one of its liquidity support programs.

Kevin received an AB in Economics, summa cum laude, from Harvard College and a JD, magna cum laude, from Harvard Law School, where he served as an editor of the Harvard Law Review.

John Hunter
Retired Executive Vice President, Customer Fulfillment Services, QVC, Inc.

John Hunter recently retired from QVC holding the position of executive vice president of customer fulfillment services. In this position, Mr. Hunter was responsible for overseeing over 12,000 associates in customer service, distribution, business analysis and engineering, and quality assurance teams, and the company's three US based call centers and its four US distribution centers. He also led the building of fulfillment and customer service operations in each of QVC's global operations in Europe and Asia.

Hunter joined QVC in 1991 as vice president of customer services and has held various roles of increasing responsibility with the company, including senior vice president of distribution and senior vice president of customer services. Among his many successes with the company, Hunter played an architectural role in developing QVC’s world-class customer service organization. Under his leadership, QVC won top placements in the most respected retail industry rankings for customer service. QVC recently achieved second place in ForeSee’s ranking of retailers who provide the highest customer satisfaction.

In January 2013 QVC was recognized as a Top 10 retailer for customer service by the National Retail Federation (NRF) for the fourth consecutive year. Hunter spearheaded the transformation of QVC's distribution network to support the rapid growth of the company's e-commerce platforms, and helped lead the charge for new technologies across television, phone, online, mobile and tablet touch points to enhance the user experience.

Mr. Hunter’s previous professional background includes a nine-year career with Citibank, serving as senior vice president in its credit card division. Prior to Citibank, Hunter spent eight years with Avis Rent a Car in sales and marketing.

Hunter served on the board of directors for GSI Commerce, Inc. He is also the advisory board chairman for the Leadership Development Program at the Johns Hopkins Carey Business School, and participates in speaking engagements with other universities and businesses.

Hunter is a contributing author to Ernan Roman’s “Integrated Direct Marketing” and Lance and Dorothy Berger’s “Talent Management Handbook.”

Hunter earned his bachelor’s degree in marketing from Pace University in New York.
